Getty/Netflix/HBO Even with his mom cutting through the background of a Zoom call from Brisbane, Australia, Jacob Elordi looks at peace. He's been quarantining with his family in the land down under ever since the COVID-19 pandemic began, and as a result, he's many miles away from the hype that's about to hit a certain subset of people in the United States, prompting his latest film, The Kissing Booth 2, to reach the top of Netflix's charts. Elordi's come a long way since 2018, when he had his breakout moment in the original Kissing Booth, a full year before he became perhaps the definitive zoomer sociopath in HBO's Euphoria. Fans swooned over his portrayal of Noah Flynn, a self-centered womanizer who eventually falls in love with his brother's best friend. But it wasn't the 23-year-old's performance they vehemently responded to—it was his washboard abs that became the piece de resistance, on display whenever the scene warranted it—and the scene warranted it quite a bit. "I trained extensively for the first film, because it was strictly about lifting heavy weights, gaining muscle and looking well-defined whenever the camera turned to him. As the world became enamored with the result of his diligent workout schedule, Elordi became disillusioned with how people only seemed to remark on his physical appearance, rather than the work he was doing when the cameras were rolling. "At the time, I was super young and got thrown into a world where everyone wanted to talk about my body... it really fucking bothered me," he says. "I don't identify with that whatsoever. I was trying to prove myself and be known as an actor. It was so much working out and I hated every second of it." Netflix's attention given to his body—and his growing hate for that attention—prompted Elordi to take a step back and evaluate how he could approach fitness differently. As he slimmed down for his role in Euphoria ("I wanted to go from being bigger to smaller as Nate goes through his mental transition"), he chose not to train at all for The Kissing Booth 2. It ended up working out in his favor, as the movie not only has no distinct shirtless scenes (unless you count him briefly flexing his muscles in the gym), it focuses more on Noah's emotional evolution rather than his physical attributes. But that didn't mean Elordi was completely done taking care of himself. He decided to go on a fitness journey of sorts. Instead of solely doing body weights, he now incorporates 45-60 minutes of yoga and pilates a day, which he's not only obsessed with ("I actually love it"), but has also uses as a tool to stay centered and grounded in the midst of all the tumult in the world. "[The Kissing Booth] was all about sculpting and making sure I had this figure that I thought the character needed," he says of his evolution. "Now, it's more functional. I wanted to be a blank canvas and be more concerned with my health. I wanted to be able to walk and run with my grandkids when I'm eighty-something, you know? It's more about being functional as opposed to actual aesthetics." He pauses for a moment before cracking up to himself. "Let's be honest —I have no interest in going to the beach and looking like The Rock." Netflix just as his roles change, Elordi's changing as well. Subscribe to Men's HealthSubscribe to Men's HealthCredit: Men's HealthThe 23-year-old actor shared an insight into how he's been spending the unexpected free time. He's tried (and subsequently abandoned) his guided meditation app, watched HBO's Mark Ruffalo-as-twins series I Know This Much Is True ("I genuinely believe it's flawless and might be the first perfect thing ever made") and finished reading Nausea by Jean-Paul Sartre. And like the good Aussie he is, he's been surfing and getting to the beach whenever possible. He's also appreciating the time to slow down and spend time with friends and family, something he hasn't had the chance to do since moving to the States. And since he's talking about the pandemic and what he's watching, it brings to mind something others might be watching—Euphoria. Production for the upcoming second season shut down not long after the pandemic began; like everyone else, he has no idea as to when he—or the show—is coming back. "I think everyone on the production side of everything is just kind of hoping for the best and continually receiving the worst," he laughs. "I just hope that it can get better first, and as a result I can go back to work." Until then, he's excited to hear what fans say about The Kissing Booth 2 and their reactions. "I hope, with everything going on in the world, that the movie can give them some sort of reprieve for two hours. I hope they get a smile and find a great amount of joy in watching the movie. That's all I can really ask for." Adrianna Freedman writes all things TV and film for Cosmo. When not binge-watching the latest series on Netflix, she is busy singing along to her favorite artists/showtunes, consuming too many coffees a day and dreaming about penning her next big story. Two years later, The Kissing Booth is finally back open for business. The sequel to the Netflix original movie, starring Joey King, Jacob Elordi, Joel Courtney, and Molly Ringwald is officially set to hit the streaming service on July 24. Judging by the new trailer, The Kissing Booth 2 seems to promise just as many ups and downs in the messy realms of love and friendship as the first. Based on the novel of the same name by Beth Reekles, the story continues right where the first left off. In the original, Elle (King) falls into a somewhat complicated whirlwind romance with Noah (Elordi), even though dating him threatens her best-friendship with his younger brother Lee (Courtney). After a series of hurdles and hilarious twists of fate, however, Lee and Elle work it out and Elle spends a happy summer with Noah before he goes off to Harvard. In the sequel, Elle and Noah navigate maintaining a long-distance relationship, even though Elle is suspicious that her boyfriend might be enjoying college and his new female classmates more than she would like. On her end, Elle is once again faced with trying to book unwilling talent for the kissing booth — this time, the handsome, confident new "snack" Marco (Taylor Zakhar Perez), who seems to have his eye on Elle. And of course, her budding love triangle and ever-changing future plans promise to mess with her precious relationship with Noah. Times change, but boy problems basically stay the same. Sigh. Check out the trailer for the film below. Three years after the first Kissing Booth film that stole the hearts of teens — and let's be real, a number of grown people — all over the world, Netflix is closing out the love story of Elle (Joey King) and Noah (Jacob Elordi) with a bang. The final chapter of one of the streaming platform's most popular teen romance franchises is almost upon us, and its trailer hints that Elle's happily ever after won't come without its fair share of drama. And honestly, we wouldn't have it any other way. The Kissing Booth 3 picks up right where the 2020 sequel left off, seeing Elle stuck between a rock and a hard place as she tries to decide where she's going to college. In the end credits of the second film, we learned that our protagonist had actually been accepted into both Harvard University and the University of California, Berkeley without even one studying montage. Both options are technically great — respectively, they'll lead to her either staying in California with her best friend Lee (Joel Courtney) or heading back to the east coast with Noah — but there's also a part of Elle that isn't quite sure which choice is best for her. "Maybe your choices have more to do with what other people want," notes Elle's mom (played by Molly Ringwald) astutely in the trailer. "Maybe it's time to think about what you want." While she mulls over the biggest decision she's ever faced, however, Elle's keeping busy with a beach bucket list with Lee that includes competing in a professional sandcastle building competition and jumping off of a cliff. Also keeping her on her toes is the sudden reappearance of Marco thee Snack (Taylor Zakhar Perez), who is still very fine and still very into Elle, resulting yet another major choice for her to make: stay with Noah or make a new future with the equally hot Marco? (There is a right answer, girl.) All in all, the trailer promises fun in the sun, romance, and just the right amount of stress, which is what what The Kissing Booth has always been about. While many may be dreading the end of this teen trilogy, all good things must come to an end — just like you survived the end of To All the Boys, you'll be okay when Elle and Noah's story is over. Plus, if you miss Jacob Elordi too much, season two of Euphoria is just around the corner. The Kissing Booth 3 will be available for streaming starting August 11, 2021, only on Netflix. As the end of summer nears, so does the end of a beloved Netflix series: the Kissing Booth films. Earlier this week, the streaming platform premiered The Kissing Booth 3, the final chapter in the teen rom-com that put Joey King and Jacob Elordi on the Hollywood map. Expect more kissing and maybe even the presence of a booth or two — along with the bittersweet emotions that come with a farewell to King's recent high school graduate Elle and her oft-grumpy college dreamboat Noah (Elordi). While Kissing Booth 3 offers a glossy and generally joyful look at California, another new Netflix title this week is far more enamored with the inherent darkness of L.A. That project is Brand New Cherry Flavor, a proudly weird TV show about curses, the undead, and the horror of creativity. This is Get Out mom Catherine Keener like you've never, ever, ever seen before. You'll also find a new baking series, a John David Washington-led thriller, the return of Netflix's absolute sexiest international series, and more. These are all the new Netflix offerings broken down by plot, genre, and whether you should watch something immediately or skip for now. Keep reading for the lowdown on all of these Netflix treats, including their trailers.
